Reviewed by: Dave Lucas Last update: November 18, 2016]>You're out to lunch when a co-worker sends you a brilliant idea. What do you do? You open up OneNote on your laptop, and you start writing. That's cool and all, but you've got a better idea. Why not use a tablet, and write on that device? If the tablet is an iPad, the standard gesture for unlocking a page is swiping up from the bottom of the screen. You'll get a note view with your cursor. That's great if you want to write down some quick notes, but it doesn't work so well for a detailed presentation. So instead of writing on OneNote, you take a photo of your tablet, and then you open up OneNote on the iPad. You can now start writing, right on the image. You can use gestures to move around your note. Swipe left or right on your iPad to get a preview of the previous or next page. You can even zoom into a piece of your note, like the body of a table. It's just like looking through a window on a dual-screen desktop computer. Another alternative, of course, is to stick to the laptop. You can then take a photo of the notebook, and then open up the page on the iPad. You can then write on it, and it all happens in real-time. You can do the same thing on other devices, as well. You could take a photo of your tablet, and then open up the OneNote app on
